"If they're Rich's shoes they're proper."

Ten-two F.

As the autumn leaves are falling society's devotees take up their social life—from now there will be one continual round of festivities set down on the social calendar.

This store—because of its unique styles and extraordinary stock—plays an important part in the social game—as important as the modiste who creates the gown or costume to be worn. Nothing can possibly take the place of our footwear—there's indefinable style and smartness about it that every woman wants. For the coming winter's balls, receptions, parties, dinners, coming-out events—and the like—we have every sort of correct footwear—variety and styles are perfect. Satin slippers for weddings—in nearly every known shade—anything out of the ordinary you desire we can make to order in a jiffy.

The average shoe merchant is all at sea when it comes to showing golf, hunting and shooting footwear—or for bicycling and riding—his ambition seems to be satisfied in the ordinary street footwear. Here you find all these "novelties"—every want can be instantly supplied.

We want every particular young person to see our smart-looking "college" shoes—nothing to equal them in stylish exclusiveness in the country. Give wearers the finishing touch to a perfect dress.

Just fitted out another young ladies' seminary with gymnasium footwear—glad to supply any other.

GRAND RALLY FOR THE WHALERS

Lieut. Jarvis Tells the Story of Point Barrow Relief Expedition.

Lecture Before National Geographic Society—Commitment to Revenue Cutter Service.

Lieut. D. H. Jarvis of the United States internal revenue cutter service entertained the members of the National Geographic Society and their friends at the Columbian University Hall last night. He delivered a lecture on the Point Barrow relief expedition, and carried his audience, which was of large proportions, along that hazardous trip by means of a stereopticon. It was a detailed account of the government expedition to succor the imprisoned whalers in Bering sea, who were caught by the ice and believed to be starving during the winter of 1897 and 1898.

In the absence of the president and vice president of the society, Mr. Henry F. Blount presided. He referred to the daring exploits of the lecturer, and pressed the department which made these undertakings possible. The Secretary of the Treasury was present, and gracefully acknowledged the compliment to the department over which he presided. He said the oft-repeated quotation, "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war" might well be changed to read: "The victories of peace in the name of humanity and the saving of life are more renowned than those of war." The revenue cutter service, the Secretary said, was an important arm of the Treasury Department. It is composed of many ships out on the coast of the United States and often saving distressed mariners. Give the name of that service a high place in your memories, he said. Referring to Lieutenant Jarvis, he characterized him as a devoted, heroic officer, and commended him to the audience.

Trip in Cutter Bear.

Lieutenant Jarvis had a rather slow delivery and spoke extemporaneously. His trip in the cutter Bear from San Francisco to Point Barrow was ably illustrated by aid of the stereopticon, and the audience was much entertained. A map of the territory was first exhibited, and the speaker explained how, in the summer of 1897, the northern ice pack thirty or forty miles from Point Barrow came down a month earlier than was expected, and how it had caught eight whaling vessels. There were thirteen vessels fishing at the time, but they escaped. When they returned to California and brought the news, the people interested grew excited, and the subject attracted such widespread attention that it formed the subject of a discussion by the cabinet. The cutter Bear had just returned, November 6, from its "trip" in the north when it received the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury to return and rescue, if possible, the ice-bound whalers. This order was received November 9. On November 27 the steamer was stocked, provisioned and ready to sail. The trip from Seattle to Unalakleet was uneventful, save that it was the first winter trip that had ever been attempted. When the Bear reached the straits the ice was about so thick it was impossible to proceed. So the boat was headed for Cape Vancouver and arrived December 16. Then began the land expedition, with Point Barrow 100 miles away, as the goal. It was impossible to carry enough provisions to last the trip and it was decided to live on the country. What they were to eat was not known until they were within 100 miles of the goal. The country was comparatively unknown, and the weather frightfully cold. Orders from Washington directed that the two thirds of reindeer in the neighborhood be driven to Point Barrow for the whalers. There were 400 deer in the two herds, and off they started. From a Russian, Lieutenant Jarvis said, he obtained 400 dog teams.

But Few Villages.

The country was wild, with here and there a village. One of the disagreeable features of the trip was the cold northeast wind which blew its cutting force into the faces of the explorers. Oftentimes the trail led through the woods, but, while more agreeable, in that there was no wind, the trail was lonely packed and traveling was more difficult.

After describing in detail the character of the country through which he passed, and showing views of the most striking scenes, he said the little expedition was rewarded, March 26, by finding the first of the imprisoned vessels. It was the whaler Belvidere and was the nearest one of the vessels to Point Barrow. Here it was learned that the ships Auka and Jessie Freeman had been crushed by the ice, and the crews were safe on board the Belvidere. The latter was saved by steaming close in shore. Later he found the Rosario, Newport, Pearlless and Jeanie. The crews were mostly ill of scurvy, but they immediately set about to put them in shape. Tasks were set for the men, to give them exercise. Unsatisfactory conditions were changed, and the men were given food of the deer were killed soon put them in condition.

There were 100 men on the Belvidere, 25 on the Rosario, Newport and Jeanie. All the crews remained by their ships save those from the wrecked Auka and Jessie Freeman. They were sent to Point Barrow. It was a sixty-mile tramp, and it was thought the men might endeavor to find the gold fields and be lost; but nothing of the sort happened, and the men all arrived at Point Barrow.

The lecturer here took up the treatment accorded these men at Point Barrow, and incidentally referred to the great success of the little band went off into the interior and killed 35,000 pounds of meat, which was sent into camp.

Supposed to Be Lost.

Lieutenant Jarvis spoke of the finding of the bark Wanda, which was supposed to be lost. The man who brought the news showed that the vessel had traveled fifty-five days and only traversed forty-five miles of country.

A picture that won applause showed the little band capturing a school of white whales. These fish, the lecturer explained, were much sought after, since their skin provided coverings for boats and the meat food for the men and dogs. Lieutenant Jarvis pleasantly referred to the Eskimo, who were sent to Point Barrow. He described a big-hearted people, with some bad habits, but still enough good qualities to more than counterbalance them. He described the big whaling expeditions of June and the victorious return of the canoes. This was the time of great rejoicing and gala times, somewhat like harvest time here.

About the middle of July he began to expect a vessel. Provisions were getting low and he was considering a "cut" of rations the 1st of August, when, to the great surprise and joy of all, the steamer Bear appeared July 28. The men were immediately put aboard, but the vessel did not depart until all the others were out.

In concluding his lecture, Lieutenant Jarvis once again referred to the people of Alaska. The reindeer he drove were the property of the people. "Peace" they the offspring of the reindeer loaned by the government, but they gladly gave them up, trusting in his word that Uncle Sam would remember their sacrifice and reimburse them.

Wind-Up of Campaign.

The Republicans of the fifth Maryland congressional district will close the canvass in Prince George's county tonight with a grand rally. Representative Sydney E. Mudd, republican candidate for re-election to Congress, will be present. The committee has also arranged for the attendance of the following speakers: Captain William M. Potter, B. F. Bingham, F. D. Lee, Richard Laws and Jeremiah Hawkins. The mass meeting held last night in Grangers' Hall, Oxon Hill, was very large and well attended. Captain Fisher, member of the state central committee, called the meeting to order and Mr. William M. Fisher presided. Speeches were made by Captain Fisher, Mr. Potter, Mr. Bingham, Mr. Lee and Richard Laws. Music was furnished by the Oxon Hill brass band. Refreshments were served.
